

Demetris Stafylas holds a degree in Electrical Engineering & Computer Engineering from the National Technical University of Athens (NTUA) with a domain expertise in telecommunications and a master's degree (MBA) entitled "Techno -Economic Systems" of the interdepartmental program of Electrical Engineering & Computer Engineering (NTUA) with the Department of Industrial Management and Technology of the University of Piraeus.

During the period of 2005-2007 he worked in the construction sector, belonging to the human resources of the infrastructure company AKTOR, as head of operation and maintenance works in the tunnels of Kakia Skala.

He joined the Hellenic Industrial Property Organisation in 2007 as an examiner in the fields of physics, electricity, human necessities and computer-implemented inventions. Currently, he is Examiner at the Department of Inventions of Informatics and Communications.

Having attended a great number of seminars, conferences and workshops across Europe, he has extensive experience in all areas of search (first actions), classification and documentation, consulting and information new technologies and know-how.

Since January 2020 he is a member of the Board of Directors of the newly established Hellenic Industrial Property Academy.